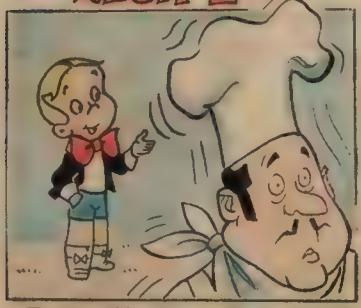
RICHIE RICH in THE FORGOTTEN RECIPE



There are 727 recipes that Chef Pierre, the Rich Family's fantastic chef, stores in his memory. Ask him for Recipe 614, and Pierre says: "But of course, sir. Zat is ze recipe for ze filet mignon au mushroom a la Waldorf." He'd be correct, and he could go on and give you the complete recipe.

You can do it the other way, too. Ask him for the recipe for Shrimps de la Van Gogh, and he would say: "You mean, sir, ze recipe for Number 236." Then he would go on and give you the complete ingredients and procedure for preparing the shrimp dish.

That's why when it happened, it seemed so strange. Richie had called Chef Pierre to speak to him about Gloria coming for lunch.

"Ah," Pierre sighed happily. "I always love to do ze cooking for ze beautiful Miss Gloria. An' for ze occasion I weel plan ze very special deesh."

"I know I can always depend on you," Richie said smiling, "so naturally I'll leave the menu to your complete discretion. Choose and make what you will. We'll both love it."

Before Pierre had left the room he had already begun going through his mental catalogue of recipes. "Hmmm," he wondered, "shall it be ze number 1, ze number 2, ze number 3 . . . "

As he went through each number, a picture of the dish it represented flashed through his mind. He mentally looked at it, and then rejected it. He wanted something very, very special for Gloria.

There were 216 dishes that were represented—and rejected—and then Pierre came to recipe number 217.

"Ze number 216," Pierre said to himself, and his mouth fell open. "Ze number 217," he repeated, "ze number 217?"

Chef Pierre couldn't believe what was happening. He could not remember what recipe number 217 was!

"I cannot believe it, I cannot believe it," he kept saying. "Nevaire in ze entire life 'ave I evaire 'ad zis 'appen. Ooolala! Chef Pierre 'e is losing 'is 'ead!"

He tried going back to number 210, and repeated once again the numbers and their recipes that led to number 217, hoping to recall the lost recipe this time. It didn't work. There was still the enormous gap of recipe number 217 in his mind. Where was it?

It continued to haunt him, never letting him go. It took all his strength and control to work on the luncheon menu for Richie and Gloria, finally settling on recipes 351 and 452. (Number 351 was Pierre's special avocado a la Delicado salad and number 452 was his chocolate fudge cake a la Russe—that is the talk of all Paris.)

Between cutting and mixing the avocado, making up the special salad sauce, breaking the eggs, mixing the chocolate, there was always that blank expression on Pierre's face and those words constantly on his lips. "Ze number 217, ze number 217, where are you?"

But by the taste of the lunch you could never tell that the chef was under some terrible strain.

"Pierre," Richie told the chef at the table, "you've done it again. This is fabulous."

"I zank you, Monsieur Master Richie," Pierre acknowledged, and tried to keep as happy a face as he could. "It was my pleasure."

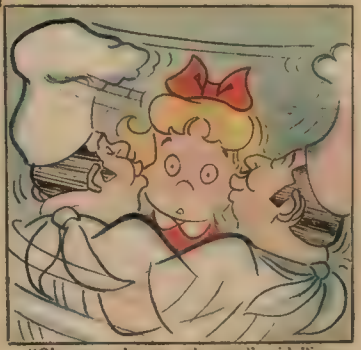
"No, Pierre," Gloria smiled. "It was our pleasure. That fantastic mind of yours sure comes up with great recipes."

The thought of his "fantastic mind" didn't sit too well with the chef at least under his present condition. In fact it only pointed up his problem further.

"And you also remembered," Gloria went on, "to not again serve me recipe 217."

"Huh?" exclaimed the astounded chef.

"Recipe number 217, Pierre," Gloria repeated. "You know, your recipe for snails de la Fifi. You served it once to me, and remember how I got that allergic reaction to snails? You said you'd always remember that and never serve it to me again."



"Oh, my, oh, my, oh, my," said Pierre, jumping up and down with joy then kissing Gloria again and again on her cheeks. "I love you, Miss Gloria ze whole lot. You are perfect. Eeet ees not zat I 'ave forgotten ze recipe number 217—eet ees zat I 'ave remembered. I 'ave remembered not to serve eet to you."

Richie nor Gloria ever knew what had happened—but they did know that Gloria had done something very right!
